New York Times Architecture Critic Paul Goldberger published " A Little Book That Led Five Men to Fame " on February 11, 1996: IT'S STILL NOT ENTIRELY CLEAR what it meant for the history of architecture, but the day in 1972 when Peter Eisenman, Michael Graves, Charles Gwathmey, John Hejduk and Richard Meier banded together to produce a spare, black-and-white book called "Five Architects" was surely the beginning of high-end architectural marketing.

Five Architects, originally published in 1975, grew out of a meeting of the CASE group (Conference of Architects for the Study of the Environment) held at the Museum of Modern Art in 1969. The purpose of this gathering was to exhibit and criticize the work of five architects -- Eisenman, Graves, Gwathmey, Hejduk, and Meier -- who constituted a New York school, and who are now among the most influential architects working today.The buildings shown here have more diversity than one might expect from a school, but share certain properties of form, scale, and treatment of material. Collectively, their work makes a modest claim: it is only architecture, not the salvation of man and the redemption of the earth.Providing complete drawings and photograpic documentation, this collection also includes a comparative critique by Kenneth Frampton, an Introduction by Colin Rowe that suggests a still broader context for the work as a whole, and two short texts in which individual positions are outlined. Now back in,print, Five Architects serves as a reference to the early work of some of America's most important architects and provides us with a glimpse back at the direction of architecture as they saw it over twenty years ago.
