Nikon only designed the camera with one manual adjustment; exposure compensation in the form of a +2 exposure lever for use when shooting back-lit subjects. If the photographer thinks a subject will be underexposed due to excess background light, he depresses a lever to the left of the lens and holds it down during shutter release.

The Nikon L35AF is a leaf shutter, auto focus, auto exposure 35mm compact camera sold in the early 1980s. It was manufactured with a full metal body, covered in black plastic with a moulded grip. A textured panel is on the other side of the camera, framed by the very classy red stripe. The lens is a 35mm f/2.8 modified Sonnar design.
