The Death of Socrates is an oil on canvas painted by French painter Jacques-Louis David in 1787. The painting focuses on a classical subject like many of his works from that decade, in this case the story of the execution of Socrates as told by Plato in his Phaedo. In this story, Socrates has been convicted of corrupting the youth of Athens and introducing strange gods, and has been sentenced to die by drinking poison hemlock. Socrates uses his death as a final lesson for his pupils rather than Plato's Account of Socrates' Death. (From the Phaedo - 115b-118b) [The character Phaedo is narrating the account of Socrates' death to his friend Echecrates ...] Nothing new, Crito, said Socrates, just what I am always telling you. If you look after yourselves, whatever you do will please me and mine and you too, even if you don't agree with me now. On the other hand, if you neglect yourselves and fail to follow the line of life as I have laid it down both now and in the past, however ...

We can't know for sure, of course, but it seems that Socrates was spurred on by similar feelings, at least according to Plato's description of the final trial. In Plato's earliest dialogue, The Apology, written shortly after Socrates' execution, the student rises to his mentor's defense. He ensured that Socrates' attackers look petty and capricious, while the philosopher king appears noble, defiant and unwavering.

Plato welcomed the restoration of the democracy, but his mistrust was deepened some four years later when Socrates was tried on false charges and sentenced to death. Plato was present at the trial, as we learn in the Apology, but was not present when the hemlock (poison) was given to his master, although he describes the scene in clear and touching detail in the Phaedo.
